Hulst's sources according to Bizup's BEAM classification system.

“Animals were randomly assigned to three treatment groups with five pigs per group in a completely randomized design. All pigs were fed the basal diet during the initial 7 day period. Pigs were then fed treatment diets during the next three 7 day periods and all pigs received the basal diet during the final two 7 day periods. (Stewart et al. 169)” This excerpt comes from an article in the American Journal of Animal and Veterinary Sciences, and can be taken as an example from Bizup’s BEAM classification system. This source is being used to provide background information on the topic in question, with the goal of engaging or supporting the writer's idea or thesis. In this case, the source is presented as a comparison between two articles, in an attempt to prove the difference in grammatical rules that can be found in academic and non-academic articles.
